Campus raises money for cancer awareness

Luminaries were lit April 8, spelling out hope during the luminary ceremony symbolizing a moment of memory for those who lost the battle to cancer.

Approximately 600 people, both from the University and from the community, and 53 teams participate in Relay for Life April 8-9 in front of the University Center.

Luminaries lined the track where Relay for Life was held outside of the University Center April 8-9.

Chancellor Kyle Carter speaks to the audience at Relay for Life about how proud he is of the University and how proud he is to participate.

Students walk around the track for Relay for Life. The event began April 8 and ran through April 9 to help raise money and awareness for cancer.

Luminaries were lit April 8, spelling out hope during the luminary ceremony symbolizing a moment of memory for those who lost the battle to cancer.

Chancellor Kyle Carter speaks to the audience at Relay for Life about how proud he is of the University and how proud he is to participate.

Students walk around the track for Relay for Life. The event began April 8 and ran through April 9 to help raise money and awareness for cancer.

Luminaries were lit April 8, spelling out hope during the luminary ceremony symbolizing a moment of memory for those who lost the battle to cancer.