Student gets to be Chancellor for the Day

By Hayley Burgess Managing Editor

While most students were still sleeping or going to class on April 6, senior Sara Pack was participating in a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity shadowing UNCP Chancellor Kyle Carter and acting as Chancellor for the Day.

Pack won a competition in the Honors College to follow Chancellor Carter around campus and see first hand what it’s like to be the chancellor of a university. Pack had to write a letter explaining why she would be the best candidate to be chancellor for the day and explain what her interest was in shadowing Chancellor Carter for six hours.

Dr. Jesse Peters, dean of the Honors College, and Chancellor Carter made the decision about who would be the best candidate, and they both agreed on Pack.

Pack began her day as chancellor at 8 a.m. and attended a variety of meetings ranging from department meetings to budget and committee meetings. Her day as chancellor ended six hours later, but lasted longer.

“I was supposed to shadow Dr. Carter for six hours, but ended up spending several hours with him because of the help he receives from his personal staff and other people around him,” Pack said.

“I really stressed to the students, and to the help he has, how much they are needed to keep him from breaking down,” Pack said.

ACE sponsored a movie night featuring Little Fockers on April 13 in the Auxiliary gym at 9:30 p.m.

The comedy was about a man who had trouble with his marriage so he almost had an affair. Near the end of the movie, he resisted the idea of an affair. The movie was projected on a big screen with an inflatable tube around it.

Some students thought the throw up scene was funny, and others thought it was disturbing.

Freshman Evan Long, who helped to run the event, said they chose the movie because it is a popular movie.

Freshmen Jalisa Duer and Demitrius Hastie both said they laughed at some parts of the movie. Some students thought the throw up scene was funny, and others thought it was disturbing.

Freshman Evang Long, future film chair of ACE for the 2011-2012 school year, thought this movie event was a success. However, he said, “The attendance could have been better.”

ACE chose Little Fockers because most students wanted to see it, according to a movie survey ACE conducted at the beginning of the school year.

This movie was one of the popular choices, according to Long and Becca Obergfell, the assistant director of student involvement and leadership.

Long, who helped to run this event, said they chose this movie because it gets everybody out and not just a certain group of people.
