By Leon Preston

Much Ado About Improv

Much Ado About Improv is a student-run improv group called University Players, which grew from six to 23 members and plans to bring the art of improvisation to the Pembroke community. University Players have more to do with the appreciation of all genres of theater, according to student director Kimmy Bacon. The group was founded by former student Topher McLean and plans to bring the group to the new SGA’s Presidents wall.

McLean explained that he formed it inside the University Players group so it would not compete with other shows hosted by the UNC Pine Needles.

“Those who go to the Constitution Day celebration each year with two shows this fall semester that will be open to the public and one big show in the spring. The dates have not been released yet,” McLean said.

They will also have a professional workshop with a professional actor that has worked with the nationally produced company Horrible Fools. The group has open practice on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Oak or Pine halls, or if weather permits, outside in front of the waterfront feature, and anybody is welcome to come to join in.

By Lilibay Akers

UNC students and faculty involved in activities including the reading of the Constitution and a roundtable discussion on Sep. 16 to celebrate Constitution Day.

The Constitution was read twice in sections by students including: Megan Jacoby, Kyra Lowry, Lauren Smith, Victoria Stephens, Mark Barber and Jarrett Cotton-Evans in the UC Lounge beginning at 11 a.m.

A roundtable discussion, featuring Dr. Emily Neff-Sharum, an assistant professor in the Department of Political Science, and Carol Graham, J.D. an assistant professor in the Department of Political Science, was held in the Moore Hall auditorium at 6:30 p.m.

“Until we really start talking about what democracy means, we won’t know,” said Dr. Neff-Sharum. She said it is important to discuss the Constitution because it is only a structure set in place by the founding fathers, and it is open to interpretation.

It is important for students to learn how their fellow students and citizens view the Constitution and to hear other opinions, said Graham. She said discussion, in general, or in any atmosphere, encourages students to see different points of view.

The government mandates educational institutions that receive federal funds to have activities celebrating Constitution Day, Dr. Neff-Sharum said.

During the roundtable discussion each speaker talked about what the thinks are modern day challenges to the Constitution. Graham talked about the expansion of presidential powers. The way the government’s position on the Constitution is viewed, the state of national security and the use of very vague language by lawmakers who have changed the overall powers that a president is able to execute, Graham said.

Students involved in Constitution Day activities

The new SGA Presidents wall is located on the second floor of the Chavis University Center across from the Office of Student Involvement and Leadership.

The Pine Needle is supported by student fees and is printed twice a month by student editors. The Pine Needle does not print anonymous letters in the editor’s notes. If you wish to submit a letter to the editor, please include your name, year in school and phone number.

Editor-in-Chief

Kaitlyn Mayerchak

Samantha Gomez

Advisers

Dr. Tony Curtis

Web Adviser

Members

American Scholastic Press Association
Associated Collegiate Press
North Carolina College Media

Asst. Editors

Curtis Brooks

Ashley Cole

Mike Robinson

Assist. Advertising Manager

Samantha Langleigh

Assist. Circulation Manager

Mindy Hubbard

Chantel Moore

Asst. Around Campus Editor

Mindy Hubbard

Kaitlyn Mayerchak

Danielle Hairston

Caitlyn Simkin

Samantha Gomez

Asst. Editors

Dr. Judy Curtis

Faculty Advisor

Dr. Tony Curtis

Web Adviser

Students involved in Constitution Day activities

By Leon Preston

Much Ado About Improv

Much Ado About Improv is a student-run improv group called University Players, which grew from six to 23 members and plans to bring the art of improvisation to the Pembroke community. University Players have more to do with the appreciation of all genres of theater, according to student director Kimmy Bacon. The group was founded by former student Topher McLean and plans to bring the group to the new SGA’s Presidents wall.

McLean explained that he formed it inside the University Players group so it would not compete with other shows hosted by the UNC Pine Needles.

“Those who go to the Constitution Day celebration each year with two shows this fall semester that will be open to the public and one big show in the spring. The dates have not been released yet,” McLean said.

They will also have a professional workshop with a professional actor that has worked with the nationally produced company Horrible Fools. The group has open practice on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Oak or Pine halls, or if weather permits, outside in front of the waterfront feature, and anybody is welcome to come to join in.

By Lilibay Akers

UNC students and faculty involved in activities including the reading of the Constitution and a roundtable discussion on Sep. 16 to celebrate Constitution Day.

The Constitution was read twice in sections by students including: Megan Jacoby, Kyra Lowry, Lauren Smith, Victoria Stephens, Mark Barber and Jarrett Cotton-Evans in the UC Lounge beginning at 11 a.m.

A roundtable discussion, featuring Dr. Emily Neff-Sharum, an assistant professor in the Department of Political Science, and Carol Graham, J.D. an assistant professor in the Department of Political Science, was held in the Moore Hall auditorium at 6:30 p.m.

“Until we really start talking about what democracy means, we won’t know,” said Dr. Neff-Sharum. She said it is important to discuss the Constitution because it is only a structure set in place by the founding fathers, and it is open to interpretation.

It is important for students to learn how their fellow students and citizens view the Constitution and to hear other opinions, said Graham. She said discussion, in general, or in any atmosphere, encourages students to see different points of view.

The government mandates educational institutions that receive federal funds to have activities celebrating Constitution Day, Dr. Neff-Sharum said.

During the roundtable discussion each speaker talked about what the thinks are modern day challenges to the Constitution. Graham talked about the expansion of presidential powers. The way the government’s position on the Constitution is viewed, the state of national security and the use of very vague language by lawmakers who have changed the overall powers that a president is able to execute, Graham said.

Students involved in Constitution Day activities

The new SGA Presidents wall is located on the second floor of the Chavis University Center across from the Office of Student Involvement and Leadership.