Brooks wins election as Lumbee chairman

By Dustin Porter

Paul Brooks is the new chairman of the Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina. The Lumbee Tribe was named chairman after receiving 1,797 out of 4,026 votes cast in the election. Brooks was one of four candidates running for the position.

Brooks said he owed the victory to everyone who had the confidence in him to make the required changes.

“The most important part of being tribal chairman is serving the people,” Brooks said.

The other three candidates included Bill Sampson with 1,123 votes, Jo Ann Clark-Chavis, with 1,034 and 979 for Jerald Scott with 727 votes respectively.

Brooks also said that the Lumbee Tribe's elections plan to have more elections and check-ups.

“Every system depends on it,” Brooks said.

As for drinking plenty of water, the presentation noted that 60 percent of the body is made of water and every system depends on it to function properly.

New dance organization focuses on expression

By Eric Henderson

The all-new Expressions dance Club is a way for UNCP Students to express themselves. Expressions is a student led organization. The president is junior Rakeem Lawrence, who is a Theatre Arts major.

Although the students have a big part in calling the shots, the Expressions club has an adviser who provides guidance and assistance. Natalie Smith is a professor in the Theatre department and also heads choreography and costume design for the University Theatre productions.

The members of the Expressions dance club are hoping to bring different forms of dance to campus. They plan to do events like recitals, flash mobs and many other events.

The club's information can be found on www.orgsync.com and also on www.facebook.com. The club's information can be found on www.orgsync.com and also on www.facebook.com. And you just love the art of it, don't afraid to express yourself.
