Art sparks discussion of diverse views

continued from page 1A

so certainly we will feel the impact of that next year if additional cuts are imposed, because we are trying to do more with less because we are trying to keep those frontline positions.

Hawk noted that the current economy is great- ly affecting the budget and said that it’s any- body’s guess as to what the budget cuts will result in.

Cultural predictions are late 2009 or early 2010, but will not begin to turn if Obama puts his $825 million out package may be that the sal- vation and things like that might be in around six months. Who knows.

Editor’s note: Watch for the second in a series of stories on the budget crisis in the next issue.

Budget cuts indirectly affect students

Budget cuts indirectly affect students

continued from 1A

Art is defined by the American Heritage dic- tionary as the “expressive arrangement of elements within a medium. The art- work is original in the sense that the feature expresses the attention the artist places on the human form.” It “just looks like a body,” Hawk said, “the hands are out, the legs are hanging down. I think there is a body hanging from there. There doesn’t have to be a rope or noose there,” said Adam Walls, professor at UNCP.

Whether the art is meant to be understood in its entirety or to individual interpreta- tion is up to the artist.

“The art is that if someone says that it looks like someone hanging from a tree, then they are right, if they look like something else, then they did,” said Efran Colón, UNCP Associate Professor of Art.

UNCP has a reputation for solidarity in the num- ber of diverse back- grounds of students, facul- ty and the administration. The number of UNCP hosts people from many ethnicities and cultural backgrounds, Hawk explained that UNCP reflects different cultures and ultimately different ideas.

We have two accountants in the controller’s office that we have not filled,” Hawk said.

Dr. Jones said that this semester her division is going to be impacted if the budget goes any- way it did last year because they have prepared for some positions might be eliminated. “If we have vacancies now, you know, we’re in the essential position we can go to our agent or to our advocate and make our case for filling that position, but he has to authorize that,” Dr. Jones said.

Customer service

There is a trend in UNCP in the past fiscal years to have a freeze on hiring staff and filling empty positions, Dr. Jones said.

“It really means that people are going to be willing to take on more responsibility, more job duties in order to get us through,” Hawk said. “We have to submit how bad it is to the Chancellor and go to the Chancellor and advocate, make our case for filling that position, but he has to authorize that,” Dr. Jones said.

The Information Commons building is pre- dominately a library, according to Hawk, and will hold IT and media services.

“We didn’t put it on hold, the state put it on hold, so as long as they give us back our money, we will start,” Hawk said.

Hawk noted that the current economy is greatly affecting the budget and said that it’s anybody’s guess as to what the budget cuts will result in.

Cultural predictions are late 2009 or early 2010, but will not begin to turn if Obama puts his $825 million out package may be that the salvation and things like that might be in around six months. Who knows.

Editor’s note: Watch for the second in a series of stories on the budget crisis in the next issue.

Budget cuts indirectly affect students

continued from 1A

So certainly we will feel the impact of that next year if additional cuts are imposed, because we are trying to do more with less because we are trying to keep those frontline positions.

Hawk noted that the current economy is great- ly affecting the budget and said that it’s any- body’s guess as to what the budget cuts will result in.

Cultural predictions are late 2009 or early 2010, but will not begin to turn if Obama puts his $825 million out package may be that the sal- vation and things like that might be in around six months. Who knows.

Editor’s note: Watch for the second in a series of stories on the budget crisis in the next issue.

Budget cuts indirectly affect students

continued from 1A

Art is defined by the American Heritage dic- tionary as the “expressive arrangement of elements within a medium. The art- work is original in the sense that the feature expresses the attention the artist places on the human form.” It “just looks like a body,” Hawk said, “the hands are out, the legs are hanging down. I think there is a body hanging from there. There doesn’t have to be a rope or noose there,” said Adam Walls, professor at UNCP.

Whether the art is meant to be understood in its entirety or to individual interpreta- tion is up to the artist.

“The art is that if someone says that it looks like someone hanging from a tree, then they are right, if they look like something else, then they did,” said Efran Colón, UNCP Associate Professor of Art.

UNCP has a reputation for solidarity in the num- ber of diverse back- grounds of students, facul- ty and the administration. The number of UNCP hosts people from many ethnicities and cultural backgrounds, Hawk explained that UNCP reflects different cultures and ultimately different ideas.

We have two accountants in the controller’s office that we have not filled,” Hawk said.

Dr. Jones said that this semester her division is going to be impacted if the budget goes any- way it did last year because they have prepared for some positions might be eliminated. “If we have vacancies now, you know, we’re in the essential position we can go to our agent or to our advocate and make our case for filling that position, but he has to authorize that,” Dr. Jones said.

Customer service

There is a trend in UNCP in the past fiscal years to have a freeze on hiring staff and filling empty positions, Dr. Jones said.

“It really means that people are going to be willing to take on more responsibility, more job duties in order to get us through,” Hawk said. “We have to submit how bad it is to the Chancellor and go to the Chancellor and advocate, make our case for filling that position, but he has to authorize that,” Dr. Jones said.

The Information Commons building is pre- dominately a library, according to Hawk, and will hold IT and media services.

“We didn’t put it on hold, the state put it on hold, so as long as they give us back our money, we will start,” Hawk said.

Hawk noted that the current economy is greatly affecting the budget and said that it’s anybody’s guess as to what the budget cuts will result in.

Cultural predictions are late 2009 or early 2010, but will not begin to turn if Obama puts his $825 million out package may be that the salvation and things like that might be in around six months. Who knows.

Editor’s note: Watch for the second in a series of stories on the budget crisis in the next issue.