Taste of iWorld celebrates campus diversity

Arab League travels to Georgetown University for national conference

By Chantel Moore
Staff Writer

Following the Southeast Regional Model Arab League Conference, 13 UNCP students, along with adviser Dr. Kevin Freeman, traveled to Georgetown University for the National Model Arab League Conference. The conference lasted from March 27-29. Like Southeast Regionals in South Carolina, the conference was a hybrid of debate and parliamentary procedure. Unlike Southeast Regionals, the National conference was more difficult.

Dr. Freeman received and accepted the invitation to the conference directly after the Southeast Regional conference, which put students in the position to prepare for the National conference as quickly as possible.

“It was a very competitive program. There were a lot of A-list schools, and it felt nice to be included in that group,” Dr. Freeman said.

Recruitment has been a plus for UNCP’s Model Arab League chapter.

“More underclassmen have been participating, which is good because they are getting a presence, building skills and becoming stronger delegates,” Dr. Freeman said.

UNCP has been participating in Arab League for the past four years and is working on winning more awards.

UNCP attended two conferences in one month, giving them the ultimate advantage to being seen, and prepared for upcoming conferences.

Editors note: Chantel Moore was appointed Editor-in-Chief for the Press Corps for next year’s National Conference.